Wildlife Needs Your Help!

Appalachian Wildlife Refuge was formed by a group of licensed rehabilitators, nonprofit professionals, environmental educators, veterinarians, and other concerned citizens, in response to the increasing numbers of wildlife in need of assistance and the lack of people and resources to help them in Western North Carolina. As the population grows and more people move to be closer to nature, there is a steady increase in the encounters between people and wildlife.

Appalachian Wild will rescue, rehabilitate and release wild animals like the Box Turtle (above) and numerous other reptiles, mammals, birds and amphibians.

A facility is urgently needed to help 1,000's of injured and orphaned wild animals!

Record numbers of wildlife in need are being reported - centers and individual licensed rehabilitators in the area are full and local wildlife is often sent as far as the coast for treatment.

To open, Appalachian Wild needs
